Handmade soaps & shampoos

We've been selling these great soaps from Soap-n-Scent, a WFTO member in Chiang Mai, Thailand, for three years.

All SnS soaps are cruelty free, made with pure vegetable oils that do not clog skin pores. They also contain glycerin, a by-product of Soap-n-Scent's homemade process, which improves the skin's moisture balance by attracting holding moisture on your skin without interfering with the skin's natural functions. Only the purest of essential oils are used.

The only palm oil used in these soaps is RSPO certified, the internationally recognised certification for sustainably farmed palm oil.

Save plastic!
Shampoo bars are easy to use and generally last longer than bottled shampoo.
Highly recommended.

Hemp bathroom and bodycare products

We have developed this range with our Fair Trade suppliers in Bangladesh and are really pleased with it. Hemp absorbs enormous quantities of CO2, it grows without chemicals in poor soil and prevents soil erosion, in a word it's a perfect crop for small producers and for tackling climate change too. It's breathable, strong and durable, an excellent bathroom accessory that's well worth trying out.

Loofahs!

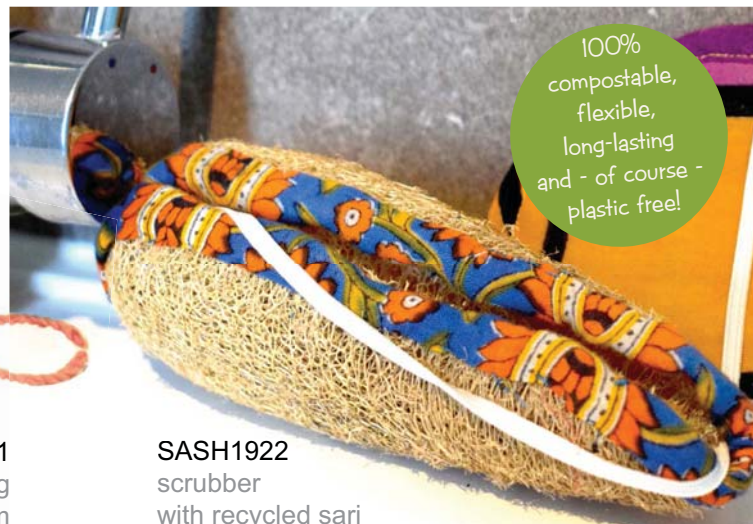

The loofah is a dried-out gourd of the cucumber family. It's an excellent scrubber for sinks, tiles and other hard surfaces, and it's a great exfoliating sponge helping to give you clean and healthy skin. It can also be used as a soap dish, its porous quality allowing soap to dry out fast.

Let's act on plastic waste

Our planet is swimming in discarded plastic, with production still rising each year; it's a symbol of our throw-away culture. Made from fossil fuels, the CO₂ emissions from its production contribute to climate change, yet over 40% of it is only used once, and very little is recycled.

In developed nations, plastic is often burnt, causing other problems, or shipped abroad, mostly to countries with poor recycling facilities where it's dumped or burned illegally. In developing nations, it fills the streets and rivers, much of it ending up in the sea. 8 million tons of plastic waste goes into the oceans each year, the rivers acting as a conveyor belt, picking up more and more as they flow downstream. Sometimes it remains in coastal waters, but caught up in ocean currents, it can be transported around the world.

It's extremely harmful to wildlife. Seals, whales and turtles are often strangled by plastic, as are seabirds when it becomes trapped in their beaks. Conservationists estimate that 100,000 birds and mammals, and millions of fish, die each year because of what one biologist recently described as "the most abundant detritus of civilisation".

Broken down by sun, wind and waves, it turns into small particles known as microplastics, which enter our food chains and can affect our health. These are almost impossible to retrieve. We need to reduce the plastic we use, and stop it entering our oceans in the first place.

That's why we're delighted to partner with two great organisations in Bali, Sungai Watch and Pangea. They both collect plastic waste before it reaches the sea, mainly by building low tech river barriers, which are regularly checked and cleared by local people. The waste is sorted and recycled as appropriate; Sungai Watch even sorts the plastic into brands, reporting to the relevant companies each month to pressure them into accepting responsibility for the waste they are causing.

Both organisations would love to receive your support, and buying Pangea's bamboo towels will help too. Take a look at their inspiring websites:
www.sungai.watch.com and www.pangeamovement.com.

Pangea

Pangea is a great eco business in Bali whose aim is to avoid plastic and help clean up the planet.

These bamboo towels are great to use, as they absorb about 3 times more water than normal microfibre towels.

The bamboo comes from sustainable farms, using far less water than cotton. And for every towel purchased, 2lbs of trash is collected from polluted beaches and rivers.
