

Sandstone Buddhas and Ganeshas

These sandstone buddhas and gods are made in a small workshop in rural Bali – they’re great both indoors and out, are well priced and extremely popular. We recommend them.

Sandstone is a great eco-friendly option as it needs only a fraction of the energy needed to create man-made stone like concrete or brick.

Hand carved Buddha plaques

These handcarved Buddha plaques are made in Bali made from Albesia, a fast growing tree and sustainable source of wood. The aesthetic approach of blending colour with gold lacquer is typical of Balinese art.

Sandstone Buddhas

If left outdoors, these sandstone cast Buddhas and other pieces will retain their brightness for years. Eventually they will probably grow a rich living patina of moss and lichen, blending in with other garden plants (our MD comments "I've had one in my garden for 24 months – and it's almost as good as new").

They can of course also be used indoors.

Taking action on plastic waste

We donated £4,000 to Sungai Watch in Bali to build a river barrier to stop waste, especially plastic, flowing into the oceans. The waste is collected, sorted and recycled every week. In the first 4 months, over 1,700kg of plastic was collected. The donation also provides employment for the people who built the barrier, and who collect, sort and recycle the waste.

Shared Earth Director Yuli Sjahleandra applies our logo to the barrier

Putting the barrier in place

In the first 9 months, over 3 tonnes of plastic was collected in our barrier

Sentiment pebbles

Made by skilled carvers in Agra, India. Last year we provided £5,000 for them to renew their workshop (new roofs, toilets, damp proofing etc).

All they need now is orders!
