Choc Affair

You've gone through our catalogue and you deserve to treat yourself to a few bars of chocolate! Choc Affair is an award-winning local chocolate business in York, the ancestral home of British chocolate. The cocoa beans are sourced from Colombia, from independent farmers and cooperatives rather than big corporations. It's responsibly and sustainably grown, with natural ingredients and minimal impact on the environment. Packaging is FSC- recycled (95% recyclable)

There is no palm oil in any of these products. The dark chocolate bars are all vegan; milk bars contain 41% cocoa solid. Choc Affair was voted no.1 brand by retailers in the Fine Food Best Brands awards in 2018. A 5% premium per kilo is paid towards the restoration of Columbian rainforests.

We write this report to be transparent and accountable, and in the hope that it will encourage other businesses to report on their performance too. (And more important, to act to improve it)

As part of our commitment to tackling climate change, and protecting the environment generally, every 2 years we produce a Sustainability Report, to account for our recent actions, and to plan for the months ahead.

The biggest impact a business like ours has on the environment and on CO2 emissions is from

- The raw materials used to make the products we buy
- The way they're shipped from their origin to the final customer

These are the key topics we address. We also examine

- Production methods (handmade crafts involve very little machinery, and energy use is minimal)
- Energy usage in our office
- CO2 emissions caused by travel
- Waste and packaging
- How we reduce the use of plastic

If you'd like to know more, let us know and we'll send you a copy.

Jute Bags, India

The Joliba Trust is a small UK charity which works in Mali, West Africa. Mali is one of the poorest countries in the world, and it's also one of the most impacted by climate change. Thousands of villagers are having to leave their ancestral lands because droughts and desertification are making them unsustainable. Joliba is helping to prevent this by planting trees, stabilizing dunes and other grassroot projects. It focuses on practical, community-led solutions that support environmental sustainability and social wellbeing. It worked with 352 villages last year and is helping to create lasting positive change for rural communities. Unlike most large charities, where a large percentage of income goes to pay wages, rent and other costs, Joliba's costs are tiny – almost all donations go directly to fund Joliba's work in Mali.

Joliba

working to restore livelihoods

Fousseyni Goita with guava saplings ready for planting from the nursery

Planting trees is a key part of Joliba's response to climate change and desertification in Mali. Donate £100 to a charity planting trees in Britain, and about 100 trees can be planted. In Mali, 1,000 trees can be planted for the same amount. They grow much faster than in Britain, so CO2 emissions are absorbed quicker, and in addition, there are massive benefits to the villagers. Fruit trees such as mangos, oranges, papaya and jujube provide food; crops can be grown in their shade; and young people are setting up orchards, providing a local income as well as improving the land. During the monsoon season volunteers also prepare and plant seeds in the ground, protecting saplings which grow naturally; about 800,000 new trees have been grown using these natural regenerative methods.

Tree regeneration. Their leaf-mould and nitrogen-fixing roots give a marked improvement to crop yields

The average temperatures in Mali has risen from 40 to 45 degrees, heat and winds creating sand dunes which have been destroying fertile lands and making agriculture near impossible. Joliba runs projects to reverse these trends by planting trees and hedgerows. Last year it also planted over 4,000 tonnes of deep rooting grass seeds on sand dunes, allowing land which had been lost to be cultivated again.

The new well at Amamourou.

In Mali over 50% of the population rely on traditional hand dug water wells which are unsafe, don't provide clean water, and violent monsoon seasons cause the walls to collapse, adding to the water crisis. In the last decade Joliba has built over 100 low-cost modern cement wells; last year the village wells they built provided safe drinking water for about 12,000 families.

Shared Earth

Our story

Shared Earth began in 1986 after founder, Jeremy Piercy, finished school and travelled to India. Whilst there, Jeremy came face to face with the imbalance of wealth in the world and became determined to help change it. Fair Trade was the obvious answer so he set up a small shop in York selling a mixture of handmade and recycled products from Asia, Africa and South America. Since then, Shared Earth has grown into the UK's largest wholesaler of Fair Trade and recycled products and remains at the forefront of promoting a fairer, more sustainable world.

Our artisans

Our artisans, often based in rural areas or small towns, are highly skilled in their craft but many have little experience of selling beyond a local market. Therefore, we work with suppliers from all across the world, established to enable small-scale producer groups to export effectively, and help them develop their products for larger markets. Through supporting Shared Earth, you are helping provide much-needed jobs for those often on the margins of society with little or no other source of income.

Tackling climate change

We know that tackling the climate crisis and creating a fairer world sit hand in hand. From the start Shared Earth has promoted the use of recycled materials but now, more than ever, lessening our impact on the planet is crucial. That's why we are committed to sourcing environmentally friendly products that are sustainable alternatives to those you see in most high street stores.
