Wood and ceramic chests

We developed these colour patterns ourselves but had problems getting them in, because of the Covid crisis which hit New Delhi badly. But as soon as they arrived, they started selling well. The colours contrast well with the designs on the next two pages, which sold exceptionally well before Christmas.

Molten glass & teak root sculptures

In a village in the hills above Ubud in Bali is a glassblowing workshop. In one corner two women are preparing broken sheet glass for recycling. Close by four men rush to and fro heating the glass until it glows, then deftly blowing it into an extraordinary range of shapes.

Elsewhere other artisans are preparing discarded fragments of teak root. The result is a collection of beautiful and unique pieces, the glass melted to hug the natural contours of the root on which they perch, frozen in time like Dali's molten watches...

PET rugs

India has a massive plastics problem, with 60% of the plastic in the oceans said to come from India alone. It's struggling to dispose of its growing plastic waste, which can be seen choking its rivers, cluttering its streets and contaminating the land. These rugs are a tiny step in relieving the problem. Do help us market them, because every step counts!

They're made from recycled PET (polyethylene terephthalate), which is commonly used to make food containers and drinks bottles. They're soft and stain resistant, and washable at 30C. They're hard-wearing and last for years, and unlike normal rugs, can be used just as easily outdoors as indoors.

Rag rugs

Rag rugs used to be made in Britain, in the olden days (not so long ago) when we didn't waste things that could be used again. As late as the 1960s, the rag n' bone man could still sometimes be seen in our streets on his horse and cart, tinkling his bell and shouting 'rag 'n bon-es' as he went along (remember Steptoe & Son?). Rags – any form of clothing – were a valuable commodity, used for such purposes as carpet underlay, mattress stuffing and seats on trains and buses.

India still has a massive rag trade, involving, it is estimated, about 3 million rag-pickers or 'raddi-wallahs' as they are known. They are a familiar sight in India's towns and cities, touring the streets just as the rag 'n bone men used to do in Britain (though tricycles are a more common sight than horses...). Households are usually paid according to the amount they collect, giving them an incentive to do so, as opposed to simply sending to landfill. However, an enormous amount of textile waste still ends up in landfill, and as India's economy grows, with its burgeoning middle class, this amount is spiralling. Collecting rags and other recyclables from landfill sites is almost an industry in itself. After sorting the waste, the ragpickers sell it to local recycling or scrap centres, who sell it on in bulk, for instance to the artisans who make rag rugs.
